Masaharu Shigematsu...

• is an English teacher in a private junior and senior high school in Kashiwa, Chiba Prefecture, Japan.
• studied at Ristumeikan Asia Pacific University where half of the students and faculty members are from other countries and learned that difference is something fascinating and fun, and it is even my strength.
Masaharu Shigematsu…

- is not an expert on anything but knows many organizations and people that are experts in a specific field.
Things I Started at School:

As a UNESCO Associated School, I have started a few extracurricular charities.

• Food Bank through Second Harvest Japan (NPO) to decrease food loss and help solve hunger
• Clothes donation through UNIQLO (company) to support refugees in the world
• Old book donation through Value Books (company) to support people and areas damaged by heavy rain and earthquakes
• The feeling of “I want to do it.”
• It’s fun to work with people who have a similar passion as yours.
• Your action can change the world.
The Impact Spread

Featured in an article on the newspaper, students came to realize that

1. Their action could make a difference.
2. Their impact on society is not small.

They began to want to try something more for good.

(Asahi Newspaper on September 18th)
Things Students Started:

To help people and places damaged by natural disasters,

1. Students joined a seminar about 3.11 Tohoku Earthquake.
2. Students organized a symposium at school to get more and more people to learn about the disaster and the current situation of the people and places.
3. The other students who joined this symposium is now asking school to donate the money that the students will raise at their cultural festival in September to the NPO working for Tohoku.

Things Students Started:

1. Students joined the study tour and conducted fund-raising in Tokyo.
2. Students started planning a more practical evacuation training at school.
Students Inspired Parents

Looking at how students took actions toward social problems,

- Parents became more supportive of charity collection.
- Parents have more conversations at home about volunteering.
- Parents started to join the school events to learn more about social problems.
Students Inspired Teachers/School

Inspired by students, a young teacher, who used to work as ballista, decided to hold a fair trade coffee stand and sell coffee to parents and students. He also held a workshop using educational material by an NGO to discuss the situation of coffee farmers.
Communities of Practice

I was so lucky to be able to join some programs and communities where I can get help from other members, do collaborative projects, and support each other on ESD.

- Japan-U.S. Teacher Exchange Program for ESD (Fulbright Japan)
- ESD Teacher Program (Nara University of Education)
- ESD Japan Youth Conference (MEXT/Goi Peace Foundation)
