Donations

On the three-day weekend in May, students at Easternfield Senior High School held a charity car wash in order to raise money to buy new uniforms for the basketball team. The car wash was one of several events planned to raise money. The basketball team was in need of new uniforms because a fire in March had destroyed their old ones, along with a lot of other sports equipment and part of the gym. Although the gym is being rebuilt, the basketball team is still in need of new uniforms.

Many students volunteered to wash cars to help raise the money. Of course, all of the basketball team members were there. Students from the football, track and field, and many other teams also came to help. The students decided to make their car wash a pay-what-you-can event. That is, rather than set a price, they suggested that people give a donation of $5, $10, $20, or $50. As you can see in the pie chart, the amount people donated varied a lot. Nevertheless, people were generous and eager to help out the team.

The event was a big success. Unfortunately, the weather was cloudy with occasional rain on Saturday, so a smaller number of people came. However, on Sunday and Monday, the weather was hot and sunny—perfect weather for washing cars. The students had a lot of fun and they raised a lot of money, too. The basketball team said that they were very thankful to all those who participated in the car wash. Thanks to everyone's help, the team is now excited about starting their next season in new uniforms.

Patricia was feeling uneasy about an email she got that morning from Bryan. In it, he said that he wanted to meet her in the afternoon. It wasn't unusual for her boyfriend to invite her to go out suddenly, but there was something in the message that was different. It reminded her of what happened when they went out the week before. They went to the theater and then to an Italian restaurant, but Bryan wasn't saying much. Patricia knew that Bryan usually didn't talk much, but she also knew that he always listened to her carefully. That day, however, Bryan seemed more quiet than usual.

Bryan had made up his mind. He had been seeing Patricia for five years and felt it was the right time to propose to her. The week before, he had invited Patricia to a Shakespeare play. He paid extra to reserve special seats. The show was excellent. Patricia was so excited that she continued talking about the performance afterward. At the restaurant after the play, Bryan didn't make the opportunity to bring up the subject of marriage. Actually, he didn't have the courage to propose to her. So this time, he thought he would try again. He asked Patricia to meet him at a small cafe in his neighborhood. He thought a familiar place might help him have more courage.

At the cafe, there was an uncomfortable silence before the coffee was served. Suddenly, Bryan spoke. "Patricia, I'm going to ask you something." He continued, "Instead of saying yes or no, please do one of the following. If you can accept, put three spoons of sugar in my coffee. If you can't, put two. All right?" Patricia really had no idea what he was going to ask. Bryan spoke again, slowly and carefully, "Will... you... marry me?" Then he put his cup and the sugar bowl in front of her. Now Patricia was very surprised. She paused for a moment. Carefully, she put one spoon of sugar into his coffee. Looking at Bryan, she slowly added another spoonful into the coffee. Then she very slowly put her spoon down on the table. Now Bryan prepared himself to stand up and leave. But, just as he was about to go, Patricia quickly took the sugar bowl and turned it over, pouring all the sugar onto his coffee. She couldn't think of a more powerful way to say, "Yes!"
